815733. SWEDEN: AE daler, 1718, KM-357, Görtz emergency daler, au $110

Swedish war emergency money issued from 1715 to 1719 in copper coins to replace the much larger silver daler in use before the war.

The name Görtz daler refers to Gottorp-Holstein's baron Georg Heinrich von Schlitz (called Görtz), Geheimrat and finance minister at the time. To prevent forgeries Sweden's government issued 10 different types in successive editions.

Sweden's government ultimately failed to buy the old coins from the market and to exchange them for coins of a more appropriate nominal value. In February 1719 Görtz had to pay for the general dissatisfaction with his beheading in Stockholm. The government's promise to accept the worthless coins as proper payment as soon as peace arrived was hardly kept after the piece of Nystad in 1721. Coins were accepted yet only for half their nominal value at 16 öre. The remaining coins began to circulate as 1 öre coins with some of them were overstruck with the new value.

COMMENTARY: (31 July 2009) Tomorrow is the first of August, the summer is nearly half over, winter is preparing its invasion, just a few months away, and soon it will be 2010. It seem that the older I get (Steve), the faster a year flies by. I recall that when I was turned nine years old, it seemed that I might never reach ten, or at least the entrance to ten was so vastly distant and out of site that I would daily forget that the new year was indeed rising its "ugly" head somewhere out there, out and beyond. As surely as the Brooklyn Dodgers were trudging their way through the summer's baseball schedule, the new year and its icy winter were out there waiting.

This summer I took off nearly two weeks for a holiday, of which the main part was a week in the northeastern corner of California, based in the little town of Cedarville (population listed as 849), where my friend André and I stayed at the old JnR Hotel, first opened in 1920, largely abandoned for several decades, but renovated and reopened a few years ago. It was simple, old-fashions, but very comfortable and inexpensive. There are just two restaurants in town, one open seven days, the other only a few days per week, but on our first evening in Cedarville, both were closed -- and the two small groceries also closed, as it was Sunday. We drove the 24 miles to Alturas, the county seat of Modoc County, to dine at a combo Thai-American restaurant of mediocre quality.

On my own, I took off for two long hikes into the mountains, passing the end of the trail and finding my way through the mountains for an additional hour or two, enjoying the cool morning weather and the gorgeous scenery. And being 2009, taking lots of pictures on my inexpensive digital camera. Now I can sit at my computer and revisit the Warner Mountains whenever I wish.

André and I made one trip up to Lakeview and Paisley, both in Oregon. We drove from Cedarville to Lakeview via the old Highgrade Road (there are no coin dealers in "Highgrade"). Paisley is the home of the Oregon Mosquito Festival, but that was a different weekend, so we missed it. Returning via Lakeview, we stopped for dinner at the Plush West steakhouse but a hearty beef dinner. I first dined at Plush West about 1970, and have been there perhaps half a dozen times since then. It is little changed, retaining its old fashioned elegance, only the restaurant has a new name, Mario's Dinner House, but the attached bar is still Plush West. And it is indeed a plush restaurant designed in the old west style in a late 19th century building. And as the locals know, it is about 25 miles west of the small town of Plush, Oregon.

On the last day, we drove into Nevada, via Gerlach and Nixon to Reno. The decrepit town of Gerlach lies a few miles from Black Rock City, with an anticipated population of about 48,000 this year. Last year it was about 40,000, but currently it is zero, and there is nothing there but the waterless crust of the dry lake known as Black Rock Desert. Black Rock City is home of the Burning Man, a city almost two miles long, whose reconstruction starts about the beginning of August and is burned to oblivion at the end of the first weekend of September, reverting once again to utter emptiness by the end of that month. What a weird concept, but I confess that I probably never will make the effort to spend that magical week in Black Rock City.

There is a sadness to Reno, where the old neon sign still sits atop the main street downtown, Virginia Street. The Neon still glows but the glitter of Reno has long flown south to Las Vegas. When I first visited Reno in 1958, downtown was still a mix of shopping and gambling, but the shopping has long fled to the suburban sprawl. Only the gambling hotels remain, together with the somewhat tired entertainment that might today draw little more than constrained laughter from those who know Las Vegas. And the sorry crowd, the loses, drinkers and cheap smokers still walk around downtown Reno. The tourist scene seems mostly a crowd of younger honky-tonks, wondering through the aging but still bustling casinos, reminiscent of the old casinos of Las Vegas that were blasted or imploded to smithereens decades ago.

But hotels are cheap, just $36 for André and I at the Motel 6 on the south end of town. And the Vietnamese café in the local shopping mall kitty-cornered across the road supplied excellent cuisine at a modest price, where it seemed that André and I were the only non-local customers. Opposite the shopping mall was a large area, with some abandoned or half-abandoned older office and retail structures, with a large sign announcing the soon-to-be-constructed grandiose hotel/mall/casino that might theoretically revitalize the neighborhood. But it was clear that the weathering sign has been there for years, that the construction should have begun years ago, that grass was growing though the unused asphalt parking lots. I had that instant thought that somehow, the current recession was sneaking across unsuspected corners, silently constructing unexpected towers from which it would later release its power.

But no, that was not true. There are thousands of such cites everywhere in America, concepts that failed, perhaps inappropriate for the location, short of funding, opposed by neighbors, etc., etc. We have such places right here in Santa Rosa. At the corner of Stony Point and Sebastopol Roads, where I make the right turn en route to my post office, a sign on one corner announces the soon to open Jiffy Lube (car oil change). The sign has been there for at least 10 or 12 years, but nothing has happened. Perhaps some day I can get my old change there, but I doubt it.

An alternate subject I considered for this List 246 Commentary was the recession itself, my view of what has happened and how is it likely to proceed. It is clear that this is no minor economic nuisance that will disappear on its own accord, rather like 2001, when it was over and "forgotten" before most of us realized that it had indeed occurred. These times are different. Perhaps next month or two I'll scribble my thoughts in the commentary, or perhaps, fearful that I would not have time to develop and organize these thoughts I'll just load the list with more coins for sale, so that there will be no remaining space for a commentary.

Just a few words on the business side. I wish to apologize for the often long delays between receipt of payment and shipping of the coins. We have analyzed this process and discovered the main causes for these inordinate delays. Hopefully, these delays will occur much less frequently from now on. Once again, my apology.
