Mongol Dynasties

Rare Chingiz Khan Gold

564. GREAT MONGOLS: Chingiz Khan, 1206-1227, AV dinar (3.83g), Qayin, DM, A-1964, obverse center: al-khaqan / al-a'zam / chingiz khan, floral ornament above & below, with marginal text duriba bi-qâyin fi sana …. // kalima, similar floral ornaments as on the obverse, unread marginal text (mostly off flan), unpublished and unique, VF, RRRR $4,000 - 5,000

The small town of Qayin (modern Ghayen) is located in Quhistan province, an arid region with small mountains, along the main highway from the town of Gonabad to Birjand. In the early thirteenth Century AD when Mongol and Khwarizmshah conflict was ignited, the region lay within the realm of Khwarzmshah. Mongol onslaught was initially directed against major population Khwarizmian centers, like Samarqand, Bukhara, Merv, etc., but as the Khwarizmian resistance melted, the Mongol armies mopped up the entire region. One of the several branches of the Mongol army marched south to Nimruz (Sistan province), either from Nishapur or Herat, passing well to the east of Qayen, that was located within the arid and otherwise desolate Quhistan region. Areas now comprising the western region of modern day Afghanistan were invaded from the North-north West side, which was just to the east of Quhistan, where Qayen was located. Arrival of Mongol armies in the region, combined with the news about the most atrocious manner in which large cities were invaded and entire populations annihilated, had created a chilling effect. Peripheral towns and villages conceded without any resistance. Whoever was in charge at Qayen must have chosen to strike its coins in the name of Chingiz Khan, in effect, a statement of confession, an attempt at appeasing the "World Conqueror" under the hope that Mongol army would not invade and devastate the city of Qayen, a wise move, which indeed ultimately saved the city from absolute destruction.

The Shaybanids were a dynasty of Mongol origin, with their name derived from Shiban, the grandson of Chingiz Khan. From about AH818 onwards, all copper coinage is anonymous and best regarded as civic coinage. From AH818 until AH905, all Central Asian mints were under Timurid control, and all came under Shaybanid authority during the following few years. Most Central Asian coppers were somewhat carelessly struck, often with considerable areas of flatness. They circulated extensively, and are often found quite worn. Unlike their Iranian counterparts, which appear to have been valid only in the city of issue and its dependencies (usually found individually, almost never in hoards), Central Asian coppers were used as a regional, rather than a local currency, and have often been found in large hoards. As a result, they are rather well-known, though new types and countermarks continue to be discovered. Unfortunately, no thorough reference catalog of the series has yet been undertaken.

Legend in seal script translates as "Enrich the Country and Strengthen the Military." Cast at the Hosogaya Mito, Hitachi Province (present day Ibaraki-ken). The original cast in 1864 in iron was a local emergency coin used to pay the workmen at the financially troubled copper coin mint in Mito. In 1867 copper-alloy was cast supposedly from bronze cannons which the daimyo (local feudal lord) had made out of temple bells with which to repel the western barbarians.

Kusunoki Masashige was a samurai in the 14th-century who served Emperor Go-Daigo in the Genko War. The Genko war was a civil war that led to the fall of the Kamakura shogunate. Masahige’s role in this conflict is now regarded as the ideal of samurai loyalty. He posthumously received the highest decoration from the Meiji government of Japan in 1880. A statue in this same style and design (quite likely the exact statue depicted on the obverse) is located near the Imperial Palace in Tokyo.
