1041	ADDITIONAL INFORMATION – An interesting note from Vladimir Suchy on Zeno.ru (Zeno-202600): "Káthirí sultán was not an issuer is this (token) coinage, but it was al-Káff sayyid of Tarím. Coinage was modeled on pattern of "merchant tokens" known in SE Asia (Singapore etc.). Struck was just one denomination colloquially called "sayf wa mizán" (i.e. sword and scales), though of different weights - initially coins were heavier. Known are machine and hand struck coins, the former struck abroad, probably at Soho mint, and hand struck were made locally, either officially at Tarím or "privately" as counterfeits."

They were made of silvered brass and the letters are very modern comparing with old thalers. They were likely produced by Lauer in Nürnberg.
