COMMENTARY (1 June 1995) — Last Sunday I managed to wrench my back out of whack, and have had to forgo the Long Beach show this time round, hoping to rest my back so as to be able to travel to Europe on the 3rd of June. So my apologies to those who expected to find me availabe at the show, but sought me out in vain.

The move to our new quarters is proceeding slowly but steadily. Everything is now moved over, but so much is still inaccessibly hidden in dozens of cartons. Lots of books are in cartons or piled in closets. Our book stock is all in cartons in the garage, and won't be unpacked until we have a bookcase set up for them.

The worst part is trying to remember where I have decided things ought to be placed. Sometimes there is an obviously logic in choosing where some items shall reside, but the problem is always that logic that seemed obvious on Tuesday is anything but obvious by Friday. Perhaps some items just crawl away on their own during the night. Who knows? But I don't really believe in poltergeists. The fun is just beginning.
